

awesome

FEARLESS FOODS

BY JEN AGRESTA

1 EIGHT-LEGGED SNACK

While in Cambodia, enjoy a-ping, fried tarantulas seasoned with salt and sugar. The legs of this spider snack are crunchy, but the abdomen can be a little gooey.

2 FOOD ON THE MOVE

Chew thoroughly! Wiggly sannakji—a Korean dish consisting of raw octopus—might still be moving its limbs on the way to your stomach.

3 HUNGRY FOR HAGGIS?

The national dish of Scotland contains a sheep's liver, lungs, and heart blended with onions, oatmeal, and spices. The mixture is stuffed into the sheep's stomach before being boiled into a pudding.

4 CHEESE AND CRITTERS

This traditional cheese from the Italian island of Sardinia contains live—yes, live—maggots. They may jump around when disturbed by the slicing or spreading of the cheese. And they can survive even after being swallowed.

5 BEWITCHING BITE

Witchetty grubs are large moth larvae found in the Australian outback that are traditionally eaten alive. Rich in protein, they're a staple of the Aboriginal people's diet.

6 ANTS IN YOUR ... MOUTH?

Escamoles, or ant larvae, have been used in Mexican cuisine since the 12th century. These small bites are egg-shaped and have the consistency of cottage cheese.

7 ALL EYES ON YOU

Your dinner is staring at you! In Japan you can dine on giant, fatty tuna eyeballs and their surrounding connective tissue.

CHECK OUT THE BOOK!

8 WRIGGLY FARE

On the Pacific island of Samoa, palolo worms are scooped up from the sea and enjoyed raw, fried with butter, or even spread on toast.

MALCOLM P. CHAPMAN / GETTY IMAGES (1); © TRAVEL IMAGES / ALAMY STOCK PHOTO (2); © FOOD AND DRINK PHOTOS / ALAMY STOCK PHOTO (3); DAVID MCCLAIN / GETTY IMAGES (4); © SUZY BENNETT / ALAMY STOCK PHOTO (5); © NEIL SETCHFIELD / ALAMY STOCK PHOTO (6); © TOSH BROWN / ALAMY STOCK PHOTO (7); © LARRY MADRIGAL / SEAPICS.COM (8)